CARB Formaldehyde Meeting: Changes Coming?

The August 1, 2013 CARB meeting in Sacramento was well attended by major wood product and related stakeholders and US EPA representatives. The primary purpose of the meeting was to provide a forum to discuss the similarities and differences between the current CARB formaldehyde regulations and the proposed EPA rule. While it is too early to predict the final decisions by California authorities, it appears that CARB is inclined to adopt many of the changes that EPA has proposed.

Warming Planet May Be Good For Trees

How does climate change impact our forests? Research led by Trevor Keenan of Macquarie University in Sidney suggests that trees in some parts of the world may need to pull less water out of the ground to achieve a certain amount of growth. Some scientists have stated that this might be a result of the rising level of carbon dioxide in the air. If this is the case, global warming may actually benefit some forests. The downside: less atmospheric moisture means less rain for agricultural crops.

Wood Veneer Labels For Jim Beam

Jim Beam's Limited Edition American Stillhouse Clermont Kentucky Bourbon Whiskey will launch with wood veneer labels!

"The prospect of making a label that would be a genuine wood material as opposed to a faux wood appearance has been of interest to us for a long time," says Shawn Nevitt, printed packaging manager for Jim Beam. "The barrel aging process is so special that a veneer label just seemed to fit." The wood veneer labels are manufactured using cherry hardwood veneer backed with a thin film.
